GEO. W. CHILDS' PROPHECY.
An Interesting Incident Regarding the Marriage of James G. Blaine, Jr.
NEW YORK, October 25.—A Washington special to the WORLD says: A friend of Murat Halstead relates an interesting story concerning the city this morning and will select his eighteen assistants this evening. In case he should make his selection from the ranks of the party in power, hundreds of Democrats who are in favor of the new election law will bolt the entire Democratic ticket. Mr. Scheel's action this evening is being looked forward to with much anxiety.

PLYMOUTH, Wis., October 25.—A Deputy Sheriff attempted yesterday to arrest two burglars, whom he had been shadowing. The to to Mr. Childs, saying: "Our protégé has gone out and done it. Your protégé has been killed and shot. I am sure that Mr. Childs will be a first-class witness who will be the object of Mr. Hastings's friendly interest."

They said: "Do it—What competition do you have?"

BE THEY DO IT? ALL THE SAME.

We are authorized to say that to-morrow

The Globe, 705 to 713 Franklin avenue, will offer from the great Philadelphia bankrupt stock, 5,000 men's suits and overcoats of every style and make at $1.75, $2.95, $4 and $4.95. These goods cannot be duplicated elsewhere for less than double the money. These are facts worth investigating.

Col. Wm. B. Morrison will address the voters of Centerville Station this evening.

on the streets to-day. As is well known, the columns have for superiors appointed so that a fair case may be made. The movement was originated by citizens who do not consider the present policy practiced by the leaders of the present administration to carry elections. It is also the belief of the people of this country that Belleville, has been very far from being

ST. MARK'S EPISCOPAL

Organization of the New Parish—Trustees Elected and Expenses Pledged.

Owing to a general misunderstanding the impression got abroad that Rev. W. Herbert Ashteton would preach yesterday for the new Episcopal parish. He had not been officially called and is still at the bedside of his sick father at New Baltimore, Va. The organization of the parish was effected last night at Vandeventer Hall. This parish, it will be remembered, is an offshoot from St. Peter's Church on Grand avenue. The splits occurred some time ago, but the new parish was not formally organized until last night. The first year's expenses $2,500 was pledged on the spot, and it was decided to worship at Vandeventer Hall for the present. Later, the Board of Trustees met and authorized the president to call a call to Mr. Ashteton. The parish was officially given the name of St. Mark's Memorial, in memory of the late Bishop Robertson, whose church he first ministered to after his ordination in New York having been named St. Mark's.

A brief service was held in the morning, John R. Triplett reading, and a Sunday-school was organized, with Charles Thaw superintendent.

Election to-morrow in the Seventeenth Ward. John J. Conroy, the grocer, Fifteenth and Poplar streets, is a candidate, and is sure to walk away with his opponent, and no mistake. So say all of John's friends.

THE TARIFF.

Congressman Glover Outlines His Opinions On that Subject.

In response to a letter from John W. Gates, Esq., President of the Southern Barber Wire Company, asking for his views on the tariff, Congressman Glover has written the following reply:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., October 25, 1888.

J. W. Gates, Esq., care of the Southern Wire Co., 305 North Second street.

MY DEAR SIR:—I have before me yours of the 23rd inst., asking me to state, at my earliest convenience, my views upon the tariff question. In reply I beg to advise you that I am in favor of a conservative revision of the tariff. I give a liberal construction to that clause of the Democratic platform which reads: "We will change of law must be at every step, regardless of labor and capital, and we will not permit that the necessary reduction in taxation must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor and without imposing lower rates of duty upon the products of labor and capital already invested in the country." I consider these clauses of the platform very significant and entitled to a candid reading by a member of Congress representing a city famous for its manufactures. I have read your famous still for its iron and lead production. I stand squarely with the Democratic platform, and I read it as above. In revising the tariff, I am assured, I shall make no discrimination against the industries of the country.

I have the honor to remain, yours, very respectfully,
JOHN M. GLOVER.

ACCUSED OF MURDER.

How William Robinson Succeeded in Getting Into Serious Trouble.

A little disturbance and a police arrest made by the Fourth District police yesterday may lead to the capture and punishment of a man for a murder committed fourteen years ago.

Yesterday afternoon, on complaint of William Robinson, colored, John Thomas, also colored, was arrested on a charge of disturbing the peace. After being locked up in the Fourth District station, on Tenth and North Market streets, Thomas stated to the officers that he had about the year 1873 Robinson had killed a man at a place on Fourth and Almond streets, known as the "Black Crook" to the negroes, committing the deed he fled to Illinois.

Robinson remained in Alton, Ill., for some time, and about two years ago when he had to flee to avoid punishment for breaking open railroad cars, and about a year ago he returned to this city.

Thomas' wife and a colored man named Henry Smith, living on Webster street near the Washburn Railroad track, both made the same statement about Robinson to the police, each making it without the knowledge of the other. The police ordered the arrest of Robinson, and the police are now at work looking in the records to learn whether a murder was committed at the place stated in which the murderer escaped. Even if they find that one was, and that Robinson is the right man, it will not doubt be very difficult to convict him, as in all likelihood, most of the witnesses of the affair are now dead.

AMUSEMENTS.

A COMBINATION OF NEW PLAY, NEW STAR, NEW AUTHOR.

Robert B. Mantell in "Tangled Lives"—A Strong Play Admirably Presented—Curtain Forth's Opening Performance—Other Attractions—Amusement Notes.

A new play by a new American author possesses much interest for intelligent Americans. The demand for American plays of recent birth, and the literary strivings of the country have only recently entered the dramatic field with any degree of earnestness. Now and then a play has been written by an American dealing with home life, and has been successful to a degree to which the same degree of enthusiasm is aroused by stars of long standing and high favor. Mr. Mantell has called out after each of the last three acts, and twice after the third act with his entire company.

This reception was merited in a large degree. The play claims one's attention from the first act, and excites an interest which increases with each succeeding act, and is sustained until the fall of the curtain. The play is without fault in its remarkably strong points. The lines are bright, well written, and are frequently witty. There is sometimes a pungency and pith and a cleverness of repartee in the dialogue which is extremely entertaining. The treatment of the theme is vigorous and whatever fault there may be in construction it does not lie in strength of motive, continuity or in the brilliancy of action. So far from this, the fault, if any, is a tendency to stir opportunities for the development of character or situations or to pass over points that might be made more effective, in order to reach the slight suggestion of a larger action in the action of the drama. There is an impression that the characters between Raymond Garth and Edith Ainsley might be strengthened so as to give her a stronger hold on the sympathies of the audience. The character of Josephus Howson is a fine one, admirably treated, but it might be made much stronger and might be made a stronger situation. Again in the last act there appears to be some incongruity in the action of Edith behind a screen to hear the defense of Raymond and to bring Helen into the Ainsley mansion just at the right time for a final scene with Raymond and the denouement. These are minor matters, however, and are overbalanced by excellencies. The first act is introductory and is not of much interest, but the second act gives a glimpse of Bohemia in New York. It is a clever idea cleverly treated. The scene is laid in the apartments of Raymond Garth, and the characters of the free and easy people who are kind at heart and may go in fact, but have little regard for form. The act is full of comedy, and a good deal of which is furnished by "Aunt Eliza," whom one of the characters calls the "godmother of all the world." The character is a sketch which is exceedingly bright and entertaining. Raymond Garth, a charming girl whose life he has saved. He loves her, but feels bound to honor to the woman he regards as his wife.

The second act gives a glimpse of Bohemia in New York. It is a clever idea cleverly treated. The scene is laid in the apartments of Raymond Garth, and the characters of the free and easy people who are kind at heart and may go in fact, but have little regard for form. The act is full of comedy, and a good deal of which is furnished by "Aunt Eliza," whom one of the characters calls the "godmother of all the world." The character is a sketch which is exceedingly bright and entertaining. Raymond Garth, a charming girl whose life he has saved. He loves her, but feels bound to honor to the woman he regards as his wife.

The next act opens on a fine bit of comedy, and Raymond, believing that Helen is dead, tells the story of his past and offers his hand to Edith, who accepts him. At this moment the door is opened by Helen, who has been hidden in the closet, and the horror-stricken at her apparent return from the dead and driven to despair, acknowledges that she is his wife.

The last act also contains a charming bit of comedy, and Edith suffering from the destruction of her hopes, Raymond has resigned himself to his fate. A final scene takes place between Raymond and Helen and Howson, who has devoted himself to exonerate his friend from his entanglement, and to tell her that he has a husband living, and to uncover her schemes to the happy ending of the play. The situation at the close is full of dramatic strength.

There is a play with an interesting story, well told, several characters admirably sketched, and several powerful situations. These elements are sufficient to commend the play to the public, and it is not always orthodox, but which is frequently and pleasantly.

Mr. Mantell as Raymond Garth, a man of high sense of honor, and placed in situations demanding strong powers of emotional expression, sustains the character splendidly. It is in his portrayal of the strong emotions, rising always to the height of dramatic power required of him and investing the character with a manliness and dignity which command attention and sympathy. His portrayal of Helen and her despair in the third act is thrilling.

Miss Eleanor Carey has a strong part in Helen Garth, which is personally suited to her and which she handles with skill and power. An excellent character is that of Josephus Howson, a man of the world and friend of Raymond, which is cleverly taken by Mr. Nelson Wiestcraft. Mr. Kinggold is good as Hermann Foster. Louise Eldridge makes a capital part of Aunt Eliza. Miss Ellis as Helen Garth, who is sweet and ingenious as Edith Ainsley, is lacking in sufficient emotional power to make the part strong. A neat piece of work is done by Miss Marie Seddon as June Wilson. Messrs. F. B. Bittner and John Landis illustrate the youth and age of duetion in an entertaining and generally successful way.

GRAND OPERA-HOUSE.

Miss Kate Forsyth, whose beauty and artistic work with some of the best organs, organizations have given her an enviable reputation, will appear at the Grand Opera-house, on Saturday night, in the play in which she appeared in the last act, and was written by J. C. Roach and J. A. Forsyth. Miss Forsyth is the part of a wronged wife, who is subjected to the persecution of a villain. She is supported by a large selected company. The play will run for the week with Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

PEOPLE'S THEATRE.

The "Street of New York," with Geo. C. Boniface as Tom Badger, attracted an excellent house last night and kept it interested from beginning to end. The melodrama is too well known to need mention, and Boniface has made a fine individual and a picturesque strength which always makes a hit with his audiences. The play was fairly well presented, and the fire scenes afforded a thrilling incident which captured the house.

McNish, Slavin and Johnson presented a programme at Pope's last night which represented the best that can be seen in negro minstrelsy and which entertained the audience. The first part introduced a number of new songs and the olio was varied and interesting. Among the specialties were McNish's imitable "singing and dancing" act, Carroll Johnson's colored society ball, Frank McNish's oddities, the Pioneer clog, led by Frank McNish and introducing concerted solo and duet songs, and the grotesque gymnastics, which were introduced by the "Little Tycoon," which was a rather previous, as the opera has never been so successful.

THE STANDARD.

An audience that fills the Standard to overflowing greeted the opening of the Two Johns Comedy Company last night and laughed away the evening at the complications arising out of the resemblance of the two fat comedians.

The performance went with smoothness and to evidence of strong appreciation on the part of the house. In addition to J. C. Stewart and Paul Dresser, the principals, the company included J. C. Stewart, J. G. Edwards, G. E. James, Misses Kate E. Ward, Maggie Elise Florence Campbell, Emma Rogers and others.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

The "Stage of Paris" is open day and night. The Casino will offer an entire new bill to-night which will run to the week.

Donovan, the man who jumped off the Brooklyn bridge, is the center of interest at the Palace Museum this week. He will try his look from the St. Louis bridge during his stay here.

At the close of the splendid performance of Jago, at the Olympic Saturday night, Mr. Booth was called before the curtain and a speech was demanded. The distinguished tragedian in a few words thanked the audience for the generous reception accorded him. It is possible that next season Mr. Booth and Mr. Barrett may make a combination and appear together in a repertoire of plays. This is not yet definitely settled but is talked of by the two stars and there is a chance that it may be arranged.

A RARE CHANCE.

Bankrupt Stock of Carpets and Curtains Materials Offered at Low Prices.

The establishment of J. Kennard & Sons at Fourth and Vine streets was crowded to-day with purchasers attracted by the announcement of the first bankrupt stock of carpets, rugs and curtain goods ever offered in this city. All day crowds of ladies passed into the store and the large force of salesmen were kept busy waiting on customers. The offer included the entire stock of the Beck & Marshall Carpet Company, which is placed at bankrupt prices so low as to mark a revolution in the sale of these goods. There is every variety and pattern of goods in carpets, and the material of every quality from the most expensive fabrics to the very cheapest. The goods are placed at wonderfully low prices. There are Wiltons, moquettes, velvet-ply and two-ply in tapestry Brussels, three-ply and Nottingham laces, portieres, fringes, table and piano coverings, furniture coverings, and Turkey, Berlin and Smyrna rugs in immense variety.

The opportunity for selection and for securing bargains in this class of goods is absolutely unexcelled. The stock must be sold at any price. The sale opens to-day, and will continue during the entire week. Those desiring to purchase goods of this kind should not fail to examine this stock.
